

Day 4:

On day four of the Erasmus-project we visited a historical village that was called the “Galician Town”. We got a guide through this reconstructed polish village of the 18th century. The guide told us everything about how the people used to live, from the job of a carpenter to how they got their hair cut. This part of Poland was occupied by Austria at that time and there were many “privileges” that only the richest people could afford like basic healthcare.

It was interesting to see how the people’s day to day life looked like. We also learned that there were different ethnicities who lived together in peace. After we finished our tour and the weather got a little bit better, we had a traditional polish meal which was called pirogi. It tasted different to what we were used to.

After seeing a little bit more of the old city, we went to an ice rink and ice skated for an hour. It was a really funny experience and there were many different levels of ice-skaters. Nevertheless, everyone enjoyed this point of the program and even though it was exhausting, everyone had a blast.

Next we went to the shopping mall again since we had some spare time till the next bus arrived. There we relaxed a little bit with a cup of coffee.

Then we took the bus and got out in front of a bowling-centre. There we met all the other students of the project. We played some games and really got to talk to each other. We played for 2 hours and one of us even won the competition. After we went shopping for some groceries we walked our way back to the hotel where we would go on to spend some more time with our new friends from the other countries.
